

Hannah Jelley

PhD Title: Co-creating a resilience-building framework for people with dementia and their carers

Start Date: 2018

Anticipated End Date: 2024

Supervisors: Gill Windle, Sion Williams and Jaci Huws

Funders: Wales School for Social Care Research on behalf of Health and Care Research Wales

My background

I completed an MSc in Foundations of Clinical Psychology at Bangor University in 2009. Since then, I have committed myself to dementia research, teaching and learning. I have worked on various research projects during that time, ranging in scale from small local teams to large multi-site international collaborations with several European countries. I have led many courses on dementia for professionals in hospitals, care homes, and staff in various services across Wales.

My research

My PhD explores resilience in people living with dementia and their carer's. This involves a mixed methods approach and grounded theory to develop a resilience-building framework. The project is supervised by experts by experience and co-production aims to achieve a framework that will empower people living with dementia and their carers.

I am particularly interested in what can be helpful for people impacted by dementia and improving services.

Contact

Hannah Jelley

h.jelley@bangor.ac.uk